

JULIUS HAAS'S CAREER.

The Pretended Heir to $4,875,000 Frecr.
ing Loans from Boston Brokers.

BOSTON, Aug. 23.—On Aug. 10 a despatch from Leadville announced that Julius Haas, a young man recently from Europe, had gone to Denver to prepare for his return home, where an inheritance of $4,875,000 awaited him.

Young Haas turned up in Boston a few days after he left Leadville, and while he had had a career of dissipation and extravagance at the expense of diverse bankers and brokers. A number of men on Change have been bitten, but they prefer to lose their money than to make themselves the laughing stock of the street. One of his victims was D. S. Desmond, a broker doing business at 21 School Street. He convinced the broker that he was what he represented himself to be. He said that his father had been a banker in Carlsbad, a partner of the Rothschilds, and had sent him to college in Heidelberg. There he had a fast career. He was expelled before he had finished his second year. His father then sent him to Marseilles. "I had not been in Marseilles more than ten days," Haas said, with tears in his eyes, "before I had abused my poor old father's confidence, and used his letter of credit to draw 100,000 francs, which I lost in two nights at roulette, and then I told him I had been beaten by a broker and lost another 100,000 francs. His father then obtained for him an appointment as attaché of the German legation at Tunis, where his brother was Resident Consul. There his extravagance increased rather than diminished, and he was sent to America with a credit of 50,000 marks. That amount soon disappeared in tollies in New York, and he again turned to his old career of gambling, and with that started on a tour of the Eastern cities, making several additional drafts before arriving in Cincinnati. From Cincinnati he went to Chicago, where he was received by parties who knew his father, and negotiated a loan of $10,000 or $20,000 with one of the leading bankers. He then went to a prominent gambler, who was induced to go to Louisville and invest the $10,000 in a sporting house. The gambler entered into a conspiracy with two others, and when the house was broken open it lost its bank roll. The money was of course divided between the outsiders and Leadville, and Haas, who had been staying there, found a bank cashier who had been in his father's employ years before, from whom he procured $25,000 to afterward return to Leadville with the remainder of his fortune.

He immediately started for the East. He had heard of Mr. Deacon through one of his father's old associates, F. H. McLogan, printer delegate from the Chicago Tribune, who had been a personal friend of his father. He was stopping. He said that owing to his father's sudden death and the unsettled condition of the estate, he could not get a job, so he must be allowed at least 25 per cent.

MR. KIRSCHMANN INTERFERES.

Disatisfied with the way things are Going Before the Senate Committee.

A solemn faced man of 60, with a very grave demeanour, identified himself as Secretary of the Senate Committee on Education and Labor yesterday morning, warning him that the proceedings of the committee were about to begin. The hearing was postponed at the request of his lawyer, who said he hoped to prove an alibi. Five weeks ago he had been in New York at the time the robbery and assault were committed. Justice Dechanty held a hearing.

"I had not been in Marseilles more than ten days," Haas said, with tears in his eyes, "before I had abused my poor old father's confidence, and used his letter of credit to draw 100,000 francs, which I lost in two nights at roulette, and then I told him I had been beaten by a broker and lost another 100,000 francs.
